Bridal bling proves its worth under pressure

NOT only does $1 million in jewellery look good, but when made by Want Jewellery it has practical value as well.

When the Southport designers showcased their exclusive pieces at the Ideal Bride Wedding Expo at Palazzo Versace yesterday we were told a story about one of their rings that survived a 23-floor drop during an Indy carnival two years ago.

Remarkably, the piece had only a few scratches on it after an Indy car drove over the top of it.

That same sturdy quality of design and creation was applied to the show-stopping headpiece, garter, bracelet, earrings, necklace and rings made by Libby Want and her husband. The pieces were worn by Michelle Lamont of Division Model Management.

Before and after Lamont walked the catwalk, she was shadowed by two security guards.
